First Day On Story Wars

Chapter 1 by Hayes

A few days ago was Hayes' first day on Story Wars. This is his second story, but it's a cool story all because it's a true fact and not a story. Hayes will now wait for anyone to write the second chapter.

Chapter 2 by OrangeElephant

Orange Elephant saw this poor fellow and decided to do a good deed and write a chapter

Chapter 3 by TRISTEN MOORE

I like Call of Duty, because of the excitement and thrill and fun I have with my friends.

I know this has nothing to do with this but, OrangeElephant didn't really make a second chapter.

Chapter 4 by SaintSayaka

SaintSayaka visited this practical artifact of a website long since evolved, and decided to pay her respects by leaving a chapter.

Chapter 5 by SaintSayaka

SaintSayaka also made a typo, and is now forever shamed in the eyes of the website. She had marred her own sacrifice to the old, old story.

Chapter 6 by Ezahduu

He had found a collection of brief notes, each one except the first and fourth referring explicitly to a previous note. It was clear then that only the first and fourth were a part of a story. The rest--excepting possibly the fifth--were parts of much later commentaries, written by authors with different and specialized concerns more appropriate to their own historical times, that is, irrelevant to both the original story and to our own times.

The relationship between Hayes (let us call them the Ur-Hayes) and the oddly but concisely named SaintSayaka, must be considered, given the text and context, to be a religious relationship.

In the initial note, the Ur-Hayes is portrayed as a novice in a spiritual practice. The fourth note introduces the character SaintSayaka, from the given name probably an adept at (or deity within?) this same spiritual practice. The fifth note sheds further light on this relationship, as well as the motivation of the SaintSayaka character, with the notion of both humility and sacrifice added to the initial notion of the SaintSayaka paying respect to the novitiate.

Given all the above, the basis for the old, old story appears to be the odd inversion of a religion where the deity(?) pays homage to the worshipers, rather than the more common opposite. This realization of the basis of the story now allows for a proper continuation.

Chapter 7 by Saranya ~ HEROES OF LIMBO (PM me to join!)

And now, Saranya leaps into the spotlight! She looks in her pocket, and pulls out a card. She reads the writing on it out loud.

"I am not going to be continuing the story! In fact, I'm going to start a different one!"

Saranya puts one of her hands in her pocket upside down, she looks at the audience, ashamed.

"Well, it appears that I forgot my card. Uh,

A collective groan rises up within the audience.

"I must go now! Bye!"

Saranya scampers out of the room, perhaps hoping that the protests would start only after she was safely out of the room, and out of danger.

When Saranya is out of the room, she leans against the back wall.

"Phew! They didn't realize that I didn't even make a note card, or even a story in the first place!"
